Future of OBC/OTS Celebrated at Inauguration

September 26, 1992, the day of President Gordon's inauguration, was sunnier than many recent Saturdays, the luncheon was delicious, many friends and distinguished guests were able to share the occasion and the chapel service was well planned. Assessed on this alone, the inauguration of the president, Bruce E. Gordon, was deemed a success.

But there was more — an answer to the many prayers for the day. A strong sense of the presence of God touched the 300 guests during the inaugural ceremony, which was built around a worship service. Family, friends (some from Sault Ste. Marie, ON, the President's home town), faculty, staff, Board, Corporation and many supporters shared the day.

Before the 3 p.m. service, 240 guests lunched in the dining room. There a number of leaders from Christian academic institutions across Canada brought greetings. Their presence reminded guests of the great partnership that OBC/OTS enjoys with other schools in serving the Church. In his comments, Dr. Robert A. Rose, president of Canadian Bible College/Theological Seminary,

The Service

During the hour-and-a-half service, OBC student council president, Jacob Birch, welcomed the President with "sibling camaraderie" alluding to the interesting six months when the President lived in residence before his family joined him in Toronto. Craig Frere, OTS student council vice-president, noted that the Seminary's theme this year is Celebrating Servant Leadership and said "Praise God for your willingness to serve."

The chancellor, Dr. Wm. McRae and his wife Marilyn, warmly introduced President Gordon, his wife Denise and their sons Adam, Aaron, and Andrew.

Dr. Rod Wilson, vice-president, OBC, Academic and Student Affairs, brought the charge to the president. He challenged President Gordon, and indeed all those listening, to be aware of three dangers of contemporary leadership: autonomy without community, anarchy when leadership is abdicated and activity without character.

Before Dr. Wilson proceeded with his formal charge, he had the president step from the platform to stand among the faculty and congregation. Dr. Wilson then challenged him to equip and empower others so they could have maximum opportunity to grow; to never abdicate his responsibility to be a leader; and to act with character and never fall into the trap of using charm and skill to get by. After the president accepted the charge, Dr. Wilson invited the audience to stand as an affirmation of their commit-

Seminary Reaches Record Enrollment

by Krysia P. Lear

This fall the Seminary broke the 500 mark in student enrollment for the first time. The registrar, Dr. Steve Roy, reports that OTS has 521 men and women taking full and part-time courses. Equally exciting is the news that there are 55 more full-time students than last year.

The Seminary has its largest preaching class ever at 53 students. Counselling drew the greatest number in a focus and has the highest proportion of female students.

The College is close to last year's enrollment figures with 515. Rev. Stephen Thomson, the OBC registrar, commented that "the student body at the College once again reflects the real mosaic of the body of Christ." He explained, "The average age of our full-time students is 24 and that of the part-timers is 36. We have an ethnic, denominational, national and international mix that provides a tremendous context for learning both in the classroom and out."

Sights, Sounds, and Sighs From September

Baseball games, retreats, information overload, caring faculty and staff, bewildered newcomers, warm reunions among returning students — all marked the opening weeks of the academic year.

Seen on Labour Day: 37 smiling OBC student leaders greeting nervous newcomers and their families.

Seen in cafeteria: students with broad smiles after eating the new delicious all-you-can-eat meals.

Heard at an OBC orientation meeting: cheers, whistles and wild applause from returning students when the President asked "What about those renovations?" At that point they had only seen the repainted main floor hallway and the remodelled reception area. The new campus shop and student lounge were still under construction.

Seen in the OBC student lounge after opening day: A transformation. Forest green and cream decor; new oak tables and booths filled with students enjoying lunch from the tuck shop; and through the huge windows, the sunlit autumn colours on the hills of the nearby ravine.

Seen at registration: long line ups — a mixed blessing. Wonderful for the registrars who know that the only numbers that count are of those who finally register; a little slow for those in line.

Honours for Board Members

At its annual convention in July 1992, the Gideons International in Canada elected W. H. Kemuel McCullough as national president for a one year term. Kem is a professional engineer and former executive with Dover Elevator Canada until his retirement in November 1991.

Kem, a member of the OBC/OTS Board of Governors, and his wife Joy have served OBC/OTS for a number of years.

John Harlton, president of Urban Animal Management, Inc., London, ON, was recently appointed to the American Association of Humane Societies. He is the first Canadian to receive this honour. John chairs the Nominating Committee of the OBC/OTS Board of Governors.

College's Mission Conference

The OBC Global Ministries Conference is scheduled for January 25-27, 1993. The main speaker, Dr. Samuel T. Kamaleson, vice-president at large, World Vision International, will address the theme Do All Religions Lead to God? For further information contact Dr. Ebe Sikakane, co-ordinator of the Intercultural focus, OBC.

On Camera

Two Seminary faculty appear on the television program Encounter this season at 9 a.m. on CFTO. On November 21 the acting dean, Dr. Roy Matheson, participated in a program on preparing pastors for ministry. On December 6, Dr. Kevin Quast, professor of New Testament, will be interviewed on the role of denominations today.

Prof a "Model" Student

Paul Bramer, OBC's new professor of Christian Education, has made it into international advertising. Also an EdD student at Trinity Evangelical Divinity School, Deerfield, IL, he is pictured in an ad for its doctoral program. You can see Paul in the June 27, 1992 issue of Christianity Today. Paul's research is in the field of spiritual formation.

Music for Canada

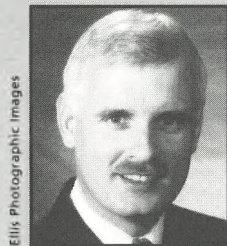

Last spring Nick Peros, adjunct faculty in the OBC music department, completed ISQUMATAQ a symphony for national unity, meant to inspire Canadians with a vision of Canada. One hour in length, it is for orchestra, choir and Inuit throat singing. It is part of a collaborative effort between Peros and Ken Kirkby, who has painted a 12'x 25' portrait of the Arctic landscape. A national tour is being planned in 1992/93.

Scholarship Winners

Three Seminary students received awards from the New York-based Fund for Theological Education. They are awarded to minority men and women in MDiv programs who are ordained or are candidates for ordination.

A Benjamin E. Mays Scholarship for Ministry went to Grace Marshall who is with The Pentecostal Assemblies of Canada; Hispanic American Scholarships for Ministry went to Enrique Aldaz who is with the Missionary Church of Canada and to Sigfirdo Ortiz who is with the Baptist Convention of Ontario and Quebec.

Lucy Kiyiapi, who is in the MTS program, received scholarships from the International Peace Scholarship Fund and World Vision. †

The Challenge of Leadership

For this issue I have asked Dr. Rod Wilson to write a guest editorial adapting the charge he gave me at my inauguration.

I believe that his comments will be helpful to others in leadership roles.

In welcoming a new President we are dealing with the issue of leadership. Not just any leadership but leadership of the largest seminary and third largest Bible college in Canada. In light of this we need to look at three dangers in leadership.

The first danger is that of slipping into autonomy without community. Pyramidal, hierarchical, chain of command notions of leadership often create a leader who is independent. Here focus is placed on the person's skills and abilities to such an extent that the community that the person leads becomes irrelevant and incidental.

In any school, but particularly in a non-denominational one, a leader needs to appreciate and facilitate the diversity of the body of Christ. A real leader will equip the entire community and remember the marginalized whether they be poor, non-Western, non-white, or female.

The second danger is that of slipping into anarchy without leadership. In the absence of leadership there is disorder and confusion. In today's pluralistic world there are many voices, and there would appear to be a direct relationship between the absence of leaders and the proliferation of phone-in talk shows where everyone has an opinion.

The danger in this case is that the leader becomes so other-centered and communally oriented that he or she ceases to lead. A real leader will take the leadership task seriously to prevent disorder and confusion.

The third danger is that of activity without character. One of the illusions of leadership is that it involves particular behaviours or a performance orientation. However, real leaders are aware that leadership is a way to be, before it is a way to do. A Christian leader is not simply someone who has accepted Jesus, been given a role, and adopted slick gimmicks. Rather a Christian leader is someone whose leadership skills and knowledge are infused with godly character. This is where the spiritual battle rages, where the struggle is most profound. A real leader puts character before activity.

If Bruce Gordon is to be this kind of leader, we as the Christian community need to do our part. If he is not to slip into the danger of autonomy without community, we need to be his partners. If he is to avoid the danger of anarchy without leadership, we need to be accountable and show him our respect. If he is to escape the danger of activity without character, we need to nurture him toward personal integrity. †

ment to support him through encouragement, example and prayer. (See the editorial for the fuller text.)

Following the charge, representatives of the Board, faculty, staff, students and friends surrounded the President and Denise Gordon for the laying-on-of-hands. A friend of the Gordons, Robert Linklater, now vice-president, Canadian Operations, The Lowen Group Inc., Burnaby, BC, lead in the prayer of dedication.

The Future for OBC/OTS

In his speech following the charge, President Gordon stated that the College and Seminary are "on the threshold of some of the greatest opportunities that we have ever faced." He said that as we move through the '90s in a changing society, there is a tremendous opening for theological education as it produces men and women of integrity, which the world is seeking.

As part of its planning, the College is seeking to diversify its program. In addition to streams in early childhood education, special needs, pastoral studies, youth ministries and the humanities, the College is exploring key affiliations with other institutions in "business, health sciences and communications."

The Seminary is exploring a number of strategies to meet the challenge of its rapid growth. One is to address a need identified by graduates for more training in administrative functions such as organizational behaviour and finance. These innovations will complement the existing Masters programs in Chinese Studies, Counselling, Educational Ministries, Missiology, Pastoral Studies and Youth. †

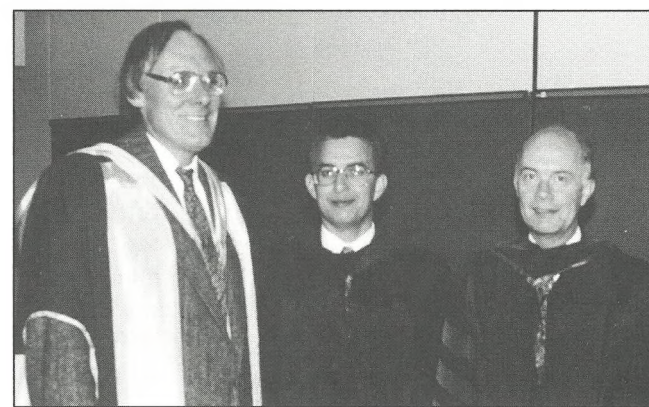

President Gordon stands among the faculty and guests in Hooper Chapel to accept Dr. Rod Wilson's charge to give strong Christian leadership. In the front row are the President's family, Adam, his wife Denise, Andrew and Aaron.

Guests: Dr. Walter C. Wright, president, Regent College with Dr. Freeland.

Also present were the CBC/CTS vice-president, Operations, Peter Dyck and Dr. Paul Magnus, senior vice-president, Briercrest Bible College, Carleton Place, SK, who also brought greetings from the executive of the Association of Canadian Bible Colleges.

Responding to AIDS

Grad gives leadership in an area of concern to today's church

by Pauline Clarke

AIDS is more than a medical issue, and Christians can respond with compassion in a variety of ways. With this conviction, I accepted an assignment from my mission, SIM International, to investigate the AIDS (Acquired Immuno-deficiency Syndrome) situation in Francophone Africa during my recent term (1989-1991).

Two students, whom I had met while studying at the Seminary in 1988-89, had helped me see beyond a medical focus on AIDS. Because of Scott (MTS '89) and Karen Forbes, who serve with AEF (Africa Evangelical Fellowship) in Mongu, Zambia, I took the assignment with a clear idea of what was needed.

In addition, because of my own background in health care, I knew that health care facilities and personnel were very limited both within and without the mission/church structure. Considering AIDS as solely their responsibility would overwhelm an already fragile health care structure.

I began my work in February 1991 doing fact-finding in Niger, Benin and Burkina Faso, although I did travel in other countries. My assignment was two-fold: to discover the extent of the spread of AIDS and then to determine the possible impact of its many implications for both SIM and her related churches. I was also asked to work with the national church and mission leaders to determine the roles that each could play, to set objectives and then to plan strategies.

Implication of the Fact-finding

AIDS is a growing health issue in every sub-Saharan African country. At present the infection rate in the Francophone area countries is still relatively small, but it is tripling yearly and will soon become a significant concern.

At the same time, AIDS must be kept in perspective with regard to the larger health picture: malaria, respiratory diseases and diarrhea kill many more people yearly than AIDS. But, this is off-set to some extent, by the impact beyond the person infected. Because AIDS is largely transmitted heterosexually in Africa, it strikes at the family, and the family is the core of African society.

The newness of AIDS also means that there is a great need to help those in the community deal with their fears and confusion. Otherwise, they cannot act for the common good. In areas such as East Africa, where AIDS is commonly seen and understood, people have a greater sense of concern. In the West African Francophone countries, however, this is not yet the case.

Because AIDS is not readily visible, individuals and communities find it hard to believe that it exists as a disease, or that their communities are threatened. Nor is cause and effect readily evident since several years usually elapse between infection and onset of symptoms. Education is made more difficult because of this, and infections continue to spread once the virus is introduced into a community.

Education efforts are hampered because of the taboos around public discussion of sexual issues and thus of the principle mode of transmission, which is sexual contact. These taboos also carry over into many of the local churches. In addition, pastors are often ill-equipped to explain scriptural values about sexuality, for a variety of reasons.

Missionaries often have a poor understanding of many of the cultural values dominating family life, courtship, sexuality and the place of children. This results partly because of fear of broaching taboo subjects, and partly because we assume at times that values are similar to our own.

Beyond the implications related to sexuality are those related to kinship ties, economic issues and facing death as young adults. Illness or care of the ill, and funerals mean loss of productivity and employment, children lose their place in school as fees cannot be paid, or because they are orphaned. The progress made in maternal and child health programs is likely to be lost due to the impact of HIV infection on mothers and their small children. The World Bank now considers AIDS to be a development issue in Africa. At times, the implications appear too staggering to contemplate.

Response

As I understood some of the implications of AIDS, I began to formulate ideas on how mission and church could respond. It seems essential that we show solidarity with others who are concerned about these issues and identify ourselves with the communities in which we find ourselves.

In some areas Christians can work fully with government and community agencies since roles overlap in advocacy, education, care and counselling.

At other times, because of conflicting values, we may modify our activities to reflect biblical values. The most obvious example of this is teaching on the use of condoms, which is only part of the solution in halting the transmission of HIV. It can be said that African governments do reflect their high value on families by including teaching on faithfulness within marriage, but the use of condoms is being increasingly emphasized.

Then there are roles particular to meeting the spiritual needs for which the church and mission can take responsibility. Among them are the priestly (pastoral), evangelistic, incarnational (the need to be present working with those infected) and prophetic (seeing what God is doing and interpreting it to the community.)

At present, however, pastors need more equipping to deal with the situation on its present scale. They need specific training in the area of AIDS, on biblical values regarding sexuality, in counselling and care of the dying and grieving. Then they will be able to further equip their congregations to meet the needs which will arise as AIDS makes inroads into their communities.

Missionaries need equipping to better understand cultural values and differences in order to be supportive of the response to AIDS through the church.

North American Response

There is also a task for those in churches supporting missionaries. Protective prayer is critical because missionaries become targets for spiritual oppression as they give leadership in new areas where Christians have made no or very little impact. One of my major goals while on this furlough has been to find strong prayer partners.

AIDS opens up big issues, and confusion and fear are not limited to Africa. North American Christians face questions around their own response to sexual pressures and in relating to friends and family members with AIDS or HIV infection. Churches need to develop a greater awareness of AIDS issues among their congregations.

The task is large, but the experience of others in East and Central Africa shows that many people affected directly and indirectly by AIDS become spiritually hungry, and desire peace and reconciliation with God. The burden may be heavy, but the rewards are there in seeing people find new life in Christ.

AIDS Facts

- Outside of North America and Europe, heterosexual transmission of HIV (Human Immuno-deficiency Virus), which causes AIDS, is the most common mode, with women being infected at about the same rate as men.
- In sub-Saharan Africa, estimated number of adult cases of AIDS stands at about 1.5 million.
- Estimated number of women of child-bearing age with HIV/per 100,000 women by continent in 1991 was 2500 (1:40) for Africa as compared with 140 for North America (source: WHO). ☛

Worship Enriches Community

The richness of the trans-denominational life at the College has been reflected in a new series of worship chapels this semester.

Last spring, in planning the schedule for the coming year, Dr. Rod Wilson and Rudy Dirks, OBC chaplain, decided to designate the majority of the Wednesday chapels as a time to build community. Staff members were particularly asked to join faculty and students, and the intention was to draw from men and women within the community to lead the services.

After reflection, the planning committee chaired by Elizabeth Davey of the General Arts Department, concluded that they should put the focus on worshipping together and that out of this community would grow. Elizabeth has a deep concern for worship in the church and said, "Our purpose for existence is to worship, but for a long time so little in the church has resembled worship." She illustrated her point saying that often all but the sermon has been treated as a preliminary.

Elizabeth commented that the committee's experience of wrestling with a number of issues is common to many groups and churches. The committee, which comprises an Anglican, Paul Friesen, faculty, General Arts, a Pentecostal, student Germaine Ramsey, Baptists, Elizabeth Davey and Dr. David Russell, Faculty, Ministry Studies, and a Free Methodist, Mary Ann Buffam, director of Development, have also worked through questions such as: What do we draw from different traditions? How do we develop sensitive worship leaders?

Conference Theme

The OBC/OTS Ministry Enrichment Conference, to be held February 15-17 in the College building, will focus on worship. The theme speaker is Dr. Robert Webber, an Episcopal lay theologian and professor of Theology at Wheaton College, Wheaton, IL. His book, Signs of Wonder: the Convergence of Liturgical and Charismatic Worship will soon be published.

At the conference he plans to look at issues such as the future of Christian worship, biblical principles, restoring the joy of entering into God's presence.

Book Commissioned to Mark Centennial

In 1994 Ontario Bible College will celebrate its 100th anniversary. To honour the occasion OBC has commissioned Alwyn J. Austin to write a history of OBC and its constituent bodies, Toronto Bible College and London Bible Institute/London College of Bible and Missions.

Alwyn, who is a son of TBC alumni, has done extensive research on the history of Canadian missions and Canadian evangelicalism. John Irwin, who has a great deal of expertise in publishing, will oversee the project in co-operation with the OBC Centennial Committee.

The author wants to draw on the knowledge and material of OBC/OTS alumnae/i and friends. The following material prepared by Alwyn describes the involvement that we seek.

A Far Reaching Impact

This volume will be important not only to OBC/OTS but also to the scholarly studies of Canadian Evangelicalism. The glory of OBC has always been its interdenominational diversity and international outreach. As Dr. McRae wrote of OBC graduates at the 90th anniversary: "What a mighty army of warriors they are in the army of Christ's kingdom."

Please Write

You can an invaluable resource in writing this history. The College archives are full of documentary material but records are often dry without the spark of personal stories.

Please write your reminiscences. Though the format of the book has not been formalized, we plan to include excerpts from letters to give a first-person voice. The letters themselves will be turned over to the College.

To help you get started, here are questions we think are important. Feel free to expand on any topic, or include any we have missed. We would also be interested in your comments on other students, either in general, or on individuals.

Your path to OBC:

What spiritual experiences brought you to OBC? What was your hometown, your family's denomination? Why did you choose OBC rather than another college? What was your formal education, your ministry experience? What was your theological understanding before you came and how did OBC affect it?

School days:

What are your memories of life at OBC: spiritually, academically, socially, of extra curricular activities, of tours and of ministry work, of prayer fellowships, of life in residence or in apartments, of the churches you attended, of the adjustments you made, etc?

Each decade was unique: what was distinctive about OBC in your time? Who were the outstanding teachers and student leaders? What are aspects you remember less fondly? What were the "spirit" and faith of OBC? What were the theological controversies of your time (premillennial dispensationalism, modernism, new evangelicalism) and how were they manifested? What were the academic standards? What were the students' concerns?

Your path into the world:

What impact did OBC have on your life's journey? Into what type of work did you go? Where did you work. How did OBC influence your personal spiritual life and growth?

Your memorabilia

If you have any records (life histories, correspondence, photographs), please tell us. Do not send items in yet; later we may borrow them for copying and will return them to you.

Researchers Wanted

Some of you may want to work with me by doing research. If this important work can be done on a volunteer basis, it will defray costs.

Please send your letters to Mr. Alwyn Austin c/o OBC. ☩

Remembering Those Who Served

by Tom Hamilton

The Second World War had a tremendous impact upon many students at Toronto Bible College and London Bible Institute. Following Canada's entrance into the War on September 20, 1939, many men and women from the schools enlisted in the Canadian military. Their service was not without cost; nine TBC students were killed during the war. While each death is tragic, two are especially poignant.

Samuel Rozell was a member of the class of 1942. The yearbook noted his enthusiastic participation in the Male Quartet. One description notes that, "He was of a quiet, yet friendly disposition, and those who knew him best were impressed by his earnest desire to serve and follow his Saviour."

After he joined the RCAF, Rozell, in October 1941, was being trained at the Guelph Radio School. On October 30 after visiting his friends at TBC, he was fatally injured in an automobile accident while driving back to Guelph.

Albert McCreery attended TBC in 1938. After completing further theological studies at McMaster University he enlisted with the 22nd Canadian Armoured Regiment (Grenadier Guards). He wanted to become a chaplain but because he did not have the requisite three years experience in the pastorate, he enlisted in the army as a combatant.

Later his years of military service in England were accepted as a substitute for pastoral work, and in May 1944 he was ordained a Baptist minister (BCOQ) in Aldershot Baptist Church, Hampshire, England.

On May 17, McCreery was appointed chaplain of his old tank corps, the Grenadier Guards and served with his regiment in northwest Europe. Tragedy struck on May 4, 1945. In an interview with Chaplain Bob Sneyd (a few months before his death in July 1992), he described the death of his fellow chaplain. "Just before the year to rescue. Albert was driving a jeep with big red crosses painted on it, and the Gerys usually respected those crosses."

Albert McCreery had been killed within 48 hours of the end of World War II.

There is another aspect of the Second World War that should not be forgotten. For dozens of students from TBC and LBI, the war provided numerous opportunities to share their faith.

Many military personnel became dedicated Christians during the war and later enrolled in TBC and LBI.

Editor's note: As we celebrate the golden anniversary of the class of '42 and look forward to that of other classes from the '40s, it seemed appropriate to remember this facet of the College's history. We regret that publication delays meant that it could not be out before Remembrance Day.

Tom Hamilton graduated from OTS in May 1992 with an MDIV degree. Tom is continuing his research on chaplains in World War II, while pursuing an MA in History at the University of Toronto. ☩

Experienced at the OTS orientation retreat: anxious moments as Ellen Rae Dai (nee Foubister, BSM '90), spouse of student Peikang Dai, tried to meet the stork in Toronto.

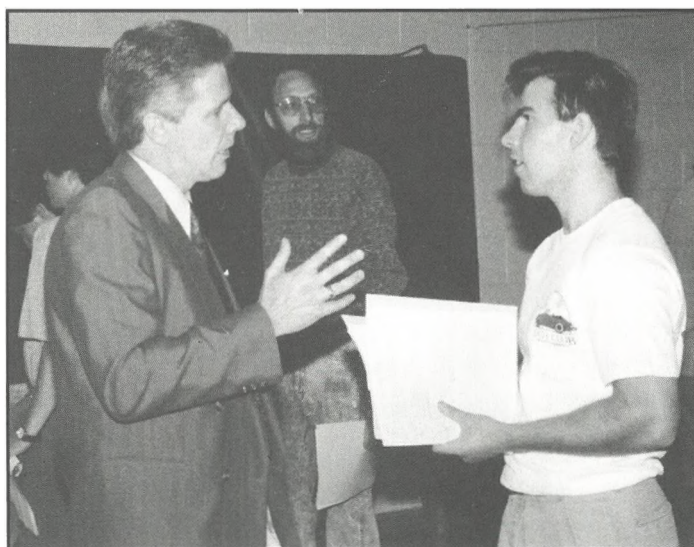

Ellen Rae started labour on Saturday while at a conference grounds 250 km north of Toronto. With contractions two minutes apart, Rev. Roger Smith, husband of dean of students Lynn Smith, drove the couple to hospital where Ellen Rae had a baby girl, Anya.

Felt across the campus: great appreciation for the many improvements. The changes in the Seminary were covered so we'll catch you up on those at the College.

The changes on the main floor came at the instigation of the OBC Management Team (President Gordon, Dr. Rod Wilson, and James Bailey, dean of students). They wanted to better reflect the College's commitment to students and to tie the area in with the new Seminary look.

The Cinderella transformation in the student lounge was a true community effort. James Bailey and two of his team, Cherlyn Fagan, director of residence life, and Stephen Wilson, director of student activities and commuter students, worked on the concept, decor and furnishings; Beaver Foods supplied funding and advice on the tuck shop, while John Buckley, the campus facilities manager, organized the contractors. Students asked that the lounge be like a family room and they got their wish. ☩

Students Work in Development in Ghana

by Dr. Ebe Sikakane

Last spring 15 students from the College had an opportunity to gain a deeper understanding of and appreciation for global development. They spent six weeks in Janga, a rural village in northern Ghana in May and June working side by side with Ghanaians on agriculture/food production. The emphases of the projects were on training women, health care, construction and supplying water.

Rick and Stephanie Hancock with former OBC student, Thomas Imoro.

The team was invited to Ghana by Dr. David Mensah, BRE '82, and his co-worker, former OBC student, Thomas Imoro ('84-'85), founders of Northern Evangelistic Association Development Projects (NEA).

They went as a summer share team under the International Skills and Service Program of Christian Children's Fund of Canada. Shirley Setter, CCFC program director, spent two weeks with us in Ghana. CCFC expedited all the details regarding funding and travel. Students were assisted with covering costs through CIDA's (Canadian International Development Agency) Youth Initiatives Programme, which funded 60 per cent of all our expenses. They had to raise only $1500 in total.

David and Thomas gave us a superb orientation on the specifics of Ghanaian and Janga village culture. They provided excellent leadership because they understand both the Canadian young people and the Ghanaian situation.

The Ghanaians accepted us enthusiastically as was demonstrated on the day we were officially welcomed to Janga by the Chief in a big colourful ceremony. Upon arrival we were met by someone bearing a Canadian flag, and by nearly 2000 people from the five tribes where the projects are being carried out. In spite of their poor economic circumstances Ghanaians were very generous to us.

The students rotated their duties so that they could all experience a bit of each project. They also visited other projects, a requirement of CIDA who wanted the trip to be widely educational.

Before returning to Canada I was able to meet with two other alumni who were not part of the project. Eric Asare, BTh '88, is giving strong leadership to Scripture Union in Ghana. Joe Ocran, BRE '90, is doing church planting and assisting young Christians develop some essential life skills. †

Dr. Ebe Sikakane is co-ordinator, Intercultural focus, OBC.

Stewardship Position Strengthened

Ontario Bible College/Ontario Theological Seminary is pleased to announce two appointments that will strengthen our financial operations in the short and long term.

In mid August Bel Voegelin assumed the position of comptroller.

Reporting to the President, he assumed responsibility for all the finance and budgeting functions.

Bel has a broad background in finance, audit and banking and is a chartered accountant; he also holds an engineering degree from the University of Western Ontario, London, ON. Bel's experience with information systems will be vital for the organization as it improves productivity and the availability of information through further computerization.

Faithful Service

Bel had a good orientation with Lorna Arndt. Although eligible to retire last spring, Lorna has agreed to stay on full-time through to May 31, 1993, as manager of the Business Office.

President Gordon has said of her, "We cannot fully appreciate the absolutely invaluable role which Lorna has played sacrificially at OBC/OTS over the past 30 years."

Estate Planning Department Re-established

Rev. Glen Buffam

After a long search an excellent candidate was found for the position of director of planned giving. Rev. Glen Buffam, who started in August, has a strong background in administration and pastoral leadership with the Free Methodist Church in Canada. He served as superintendent of the Canada Great Lakes Conference of the Free Methodist Church in Canada and he last served as senior pastor of the Queensway Free Methodist Church, Niagara Falls, ON.

For sometime the institution has not had a person to work with those who want to include OBC/OTS in their wills. At the same time, it still benefits from the faithful work done in estate planning in years past by staff such as Elmer Cassidy, Wilson Flanagan and Earl Sherbino. These men helped others understand how they could support the vision for developing men and women for service in the Church.

Glen is available for individual consultation and group meetings. At Homecoming in October he spoke not only of his professional responsibilities, but, with passion, of his personal concern for revival in Canada. †

EVANGELICAL SPIRITUALITY: FROM THE WESLEYS TO JOHN STOTT

James M. Gordon (SPCK: London, 1991, 331 pp, $34.95).

A great deal of conversation is now taking place around the topic of "spirituality," with the spiritual disciplines, the theology and a variety of traditions the focus of new interest. It is common to hear of Catholic, Anglican or Orthodox spiritualities, occasionally of Reformed spirituality, but only rarely of Evangelical spirituality.

And yet Evangelicals are amongst those most interested in the current attention being given to spirituality. Some are seeking out spiritual directors and going on guided retreats, while evangelical colleges and seminaries (including our own) are offering courses in spirituality.

James Gordon's book, Evangelical Spirituality, provides a useful resource for exploring some elements of the rich spiritual heritage of the evangelical tradition. He has selected 22 figures and dealt with them in pairs, following through in chronological order from the Wesleys to the present. Each chapter sets out some biographical detail, but focuses primarily on the understanding of the spiritual life that each person expressed in teaching and life.

The author observes that "new life through grace is the kernel of the Evangelical experience..." In addition to conversion, which brings us to new life in Christ, there are, according to Gordon, three other distinctives of evangelical spirituality. These include sharing the good news of the evangel with others, the willing submission of the mind and heart to the Scriptures as the authoritative revelation of God and the centrality of the cross in doctrine, experience and personal piety.

In the chapter on John Newton and William Cowper, Gordon observes that a common theology does not always yield a common experience of faith. Newton enjoyed full assurance of faith while Cowper lived with self doubt and uncertainty and so his spirituality, as expressed in hymns, conveys yearning and hesitation.

Hannah More was a well-connected writer in the late 18th century, particularly concerned about how personal commitment to Christ impacted moral life, and her moral teachings had a formative influence on Victorian Evangelicalism.

Evangelical Spirituality is a valuable resource of historical, biographical and theological information yielding unique insight into the distinctive contributions of evangelical spirituality.

John Franklin is chair, Department of General Arts, OBC. He co-ordinates this column for each issue. †

Annual Meeting Held

In the morning prior to President Gordon's inauguration, the annual meeting of the OBC/OTS Corporation was held in Boehmer Chapel at the Seminary.

The nominating report, Annual Report and Financial Statements were received. Copies of the latter two are available from the President's Office.

The President reported that OBC/OTS had incurred a deficit of $334,000 in the 1991/92 fiscal year. While budgeted income from tuition and ancillary (book store, residence, food services) was attained the shortfall was in donation income. At the same time he noted that the $1,600,000 given in response to the combined appeals for the annual fund and for the Commitment to Excellence campaign was excellent.

Expenditure targets were also held, in spite of unanticipated costs such as the emergency removal of asbestos in two areas.

To increase donor revenue, OBC/OTS will make its vision better known to more people and will build better relationships. As well the focus will now move to the annual fund from the campaign, which closed in May 1992.

Expenditures will continue to be carefully controlled and the new comptroller, Bel Voegelin (see Stewardship page 7), is monitoring cash flow daily. Spending has been capped in a number of non-salary areas.
