The Centrality of Ethics

by Jeffrey P. Greenman, PhD, Vice-President and Academic Dean, Seminary

ebate about moral values and ethical issues is a central part of everyday life. Moral questions are asked around the dinner table. Opinions on ethical issues are disputed over the water cooler. Almost every occupation has a "code of ethics" and almost every business has a statement of "core values" that expresses their moral outlook.

Virtually every headline in our newspapers identifies, either directly or indirectly, an ethical issue up for grabs in today's society. Public discussion of social, political and economic issues usually involves argument about matters of right and wrong, and about how to know the difference between them. For example, a recent issue of Maclean's magazine - a good indicator of mainstream Canadian thinking - had major articles dealing with the dangers of privacy invasion due to computer surveillance of our credit card and Interac purchases, the Clinton-Lewinsky adultery-andlying scandal, the horrendous massacres associated with "ethnic cleansing" of Albanians by Serbs, and the now-common practice of stealing cars for export. There were short reports on topics such as sexrelated complaints against military officers, the justice of Canada's refugee policies, terrorist violence in Africa, self-government for native peoples, the case for legalizing marijuana usage as a medical treatment for AIDS patients, Jeffrey P. Greenman and efforts by environmentalists to replenish the depleted Atlantic fishery. In addition, an editorial paid tribute to the moral vision and unusual courage of Czech President Vaclav Havel.

Even a cursory reading of today's headlines suggests that our culture is increasingly sensitive to "hot-button" moral problems such as racism, child abuse or gender discrimination. Yet, at the same time, we seem less and less able to explain the rational basis for our moral judgments. For example, during the past 50 years it has become a mainstream idea that we must not impose our moral views on others and that what is morally right for me might not be morally right for you.

Simultaneously, there has been a passionate endorsement of the concept of universal human rights, a body of inviolable moral truths. The average citizen at the bus stop probably believes both in moral relativism and in the validity of appeals to universal human rights without seeing the contradiction.

Oftentimes Christians feel just as perplexed as everyone else about these complex issues. Yet they know that their faith provides a solid foundation for the moral life, that biblical truth can and should inform our decision-making and that the gospel calls every follower of Jesus to be salt and light amidst a sinful and morally confused world. They know that the church is called by God to lift up the downtrodden, clothe the naked, feed the hungry, and reconcile the alienated.

Tyndale College & Seminary helps men and women develop truly Christian minds, ones that think through social issues and ethical problems using distinctly Christian presuppositions. The next generation of Christian leaders must learn to "understand the times" (1 Chron. 12:32) and to guide the church as a moral community

Tyndale is also a centre of spiritual formation, where Christian character is not only discussed in academic terms but is deepened through study, prayer, worship and mentoring. Our world is searching for moral direction. Christians are called to serve the world with a passion for the moral truth of the Gospel.

Sex, Death and Money... and Bioethics

By Douglas K. Martin, PhD Adjunct Professor, Seminary; Research Associate, University of Toronto Joint Centre for Bioethics

olores is pregnant and sniffing glue... again. Robert loves his daughter Tracy so much that he gives her poison gas instead of one more painful hip operation. Allan will compensate people who contracted Hepatitis from blood transfusions, but only if infected after 1986.

What are these three scenarios about? Sex, death and money... and bioethics.

Bioethics is a field of scholarship devoted to the study of ethical issues of high social relevance in the field of health care. Bioethics brings together expertise from different disciplines including philosophy, law, medicine, theology and the social sciences to examine issues that may arise in a patient's room, classroom or boardroom, a university laboratory, the Supreme Court or the floor of the legislature.

Not surprising for anyone who reads a newspaper or watches TV, the specific ethical questions that occupy the minds of bioethicists in 1998 primarily, though not exclusively, involve sex, death and money.

Sex

Amazingly, one of the world's most well-known celebrities is an obscure sheep living on an obscure farm in an obscure corner of Scotland, named Dolly. Dolly is the first publicized cloned mammal and represents a fundamental question in bioethics; is reproductive technology advancing faster than our wisdom to use it?

What about in vitro fertilization and embryo transfer? Are they a compassionate solution to a heartwrenching need or a blasphemy against the Creator and the created order? Are we ever going to settle the abortion issue?

Death

Imagine with me. There is a patient in a bed in a busy and noisy intensive care unit. The patient is half sleeping, but constantly writhing as if in pain. Listen. The machines are whirring and beeping. Look closer. She has a tube coming out her nose leading to a machine. She has four tubes coming from various other places under the sheets. Keep looking. Here comes an older man in a white coat and a woman in a pink nurse outfit. They both stand still, watching. The man reaches down and turns off one of the machines, watches as the writhing stops, glances at his watch, writes on a chart and leaves. The nurse begins to remove the tubes.

What just happened? Does it disturb you to think about it? Most of us avoid thinking about death. But overcome your distaste for a moment. How do you want to die? You probably have a picture in your mind of you in bed, dressed in your favorite pyjamas, surrounded by loved ones, you have achieved peaceful resolution to your life and you quietly slip away into a kind of eternal sleep. Sorry to shatter your dream. Chances are very good, in Canada today, the above intensive care scene will be more similar to your death than the imagined bedroom scene.

How well do we 'care' for dying Canadians? The answer to that question answers another important question: why do we hear so much about euthanasia?

Money

As a result of deficit reduction strategies, the federal government cut provincial transfer payments targeted for health care. The provinces responded by restructuring their health care systems and closing hospital services in order to cut costs. We can legitimately ask, since it is our money: on what grounds were those decisions made and were they appropriate? Today, surpluses in government revenues mean that new money can be channeled into health care. Where should this new money go - cancer drugs, surgical beds, MRIs, more nurses or...? And, more importantly, why? We require a set of guiding principles that account for concerns of justice and also work, practically, in everyday decision making. However, no such principles exist. Now what?

Christians and Bioethics

Christians approach problems in bioethics using a moral framework which includes several premises:

- God is the first and final moral authority.
- God reveals His moral wisdom to us in many different ways: the life and work of Jesus, the Scriptures and the guiding of the Holy Spirit.
- We are all created by God specifically to fulfill a portion of His eternal plan.
- God's moral character, and therefore His moral universe, is characterized by both love and justice.

However, what conclusions can we draw from those premises regarding Dolores and her addiction, Robert and his love for his daughter, and Allan and his governmental responsibilities? The answers are not obvious, hence the need for informed moral reflection (i.e., bioethics). Moreover, these are only three of the real problems in bioethics that must not only be understood, but resolved. As the instructor said to the student pilot, "It's nice up here, but at some point you gotta land the thing!" The problems are real and the enemy desires for us to ignore them. So we struggle on, learning as we go, humbled by our imperfect understanding of life, morality and God.

Father in heaven, help us.

Education and Social Ethics

by Rory A.A. Hinton, PhD Associate Professor, College; Part-time Faculty, University of Western Ontario, Asian Studies

he Enlightenment thinker Wilhelm von Humboldt once defined institutions of higher learning as "nothing other than the spiritual life of those human beings who are moved by external leisure or internal pressures toward learning and research."

Humboldt is right to relate our spiritual life to scholarship. But notice that this relation cannot be understood apart from a larger context. The forces of "external leisure" and "internal pressures" are informed and made possible by existing institutional structures (colleges, universities, governments, corporations). These structures form part of our social life. Within this larger context education is best understood as the process of socializing individuals in order to become spiritually productive and responsible members of a democratic society. One measure, then, of the level of civilization that a society has achieved is whether the institutional structures of such a society permit the human need for scholarship to be fully satisfied. Part of this satisfaction consists in providing the student with the freedom to not only understand the relation between spiritual and social life, but also to have the freedom to critique aspects of our social life which prevent such satisfaction.

Educational institutions like Tyndale College & Seminary are located in positions of social influence. Part of Tyndale's educational function is to form social attitudes among students, challenging them to explore problems of social relevance. Problems like the economic disparity between the rich and the poor (David Korton in his book When Corporations Rule the World cites the alarming statistic that 20% of the world's population owns 82.5% of the world's wealth), or problems over how multi-national corporations own and operate the media in order, in part, to maximize their own profits (this is well documented in Noam Chomsky's book Necessary Illusions: Thought Control in a Democratic Society), are just two of the many problems of social relevance that Tyndale provides the opportunity for students to think about.

What value does this opportunity serve? Tyndale should force students to realize that their eventual work as professionals will be related to the exercise of power. In the course of their work they will be making decisions, based upon social attitudes, that will affect our world. This situation cannot be avoided. This eventual power confers serious responsibility on the students. They may abrogate their responsibilities as democratic citizens. That will be their choice. But at Tyndale College & Seminary we can at least make it very hard to avoid facing the problem of individual responsibility. The basic ethical lesson that Tyndale aims to teach is that every individual in our society is responsible for their own actions.

The students and faculty at Tyndale College & Seminary have a theological basis for critiquing aspects of our social life; we must not violate the first and second commandments. We function under the ban of idolatry, and this includes conceptual idolatry. As an educational institution we must be on our guard that we do not simply internalize the economic and political values of our present society and think they are similar, if not identical, to our own ethical form of life. By remaining true to the ban under which Tyndale College & Seminary functions we can best contribute to a free society by preserving our religious independence. This will foster among us the courage to remain true to our ethical convictions. It will also foster the courage to call into question convictions gained by the internalization of the values of our present state capitalist society. The question that we all must face is whether we will serve power by internalizing these values, or whether we will serve truth by calling these values into question. Our spiritual life of learning and research provides a way to respond appropriately to this question. This will ensure that we will continue to be spiritually responsible and productive members of a democratic society.

You may recall a TV advertisement some years ago. An older gentleman talks about a particular investment company and ends the 30 second commercial with the line, "We make money

The bond of trust between Tyndale and you - our prayer and the old fashion way: we earn it." supporting partners - develops over time. Trust is not given easily or automatically to each other; it is developed, as the line goes, "the old fashion way: we earn it."

That's also true for us in personal relationships. Over time and in many situations, we learn that we can trust each other.

And as we do, we learn to trust more. Our walk with Christ calls us back again and again to trust in His promises. As an educational community serving a large constituency here in Canada, we know that the growth we are experiencing and the support we are receiving comes out of a growing bond of trust. We want that to grow. We also know we must continue to earn it. From time to time, I receive letters from those who have a question about something we are doing. I welcome those letters. I want you to feel open and comfortable to drop me a line about something which may not seem right to you. This is your school and my prayer is that together we will witness the moving of His church in such a powerful way as to effectively transform our society with the pervasive power of God. Thank you for giving us the opportunity of building this bond of trust with you.

My Favourite Book

by Andrew Bronson, Manager, Tyndale Bookstore

Everything we are. Everything we have. Everything we do. That is the best way to describe what Os Guinness' newest book is all about. The Call: Finding and Fulfilling the Central Purpose of Your Life is a timely book. In a postmodern world where people are searching for meaning and fulfillment as never before, this book strikes a chord that will likely resonate with many.

The subject of calling is often thought of as a narrow issue that pertains mainly to clergy and other ministry professionals. Not so says Guinness, as he demonstrates a much broader and more comprehensive understanding of the notion of calling. Secular callings are just as valid as religious ones because we each need to know our own unique design. All of us are drawn to ask "the ultimate why" because we long for a sense of purpose. Success simply isn't enough, we each need to find significance.

Throughout the book Guinness explores all kinds of issues related to calling such as giftedness, the religious vs. secular dimen-Andrew Bronson sions, primary and secondary callings, and individual vs. corporate callings. No stone seems to be left unturned as he prods us to recapture a real sense of what calling is in a postmodern world where we are overwhelmed with choices about who we can be and what we can do for living, according to Guinness. By defining work, vocation and calling, Guinness gives us insight as to how we begin to find meaning and purpose in daily life. Guinness confesses that this idea of calling has burned longer and more fiercely within him than any other book project he has worked on. As you read, Guinness' passion becomes evident. He is convinced that rediscovering a notion of calling will help many who are longing so deeply for a reason to be. At a time when people have more opportunity available than ever before, Guinness feels that people need to shut out the myriad voices that clamor for their attention in order to hear God's voice that calls to us. Rather than providing quick and easy answers, Guinness reflects thoughtfully on the issues and asks all kinds of questions of the reader. Repeatedly he drives home the message "Listen to Jesus of Nazareth; answer His call." It may be that in a fragmented world where each of us searches for authenticity, intimacy, and meaning, the idea of listening to the call of Jesus is the very thing we need. Not a new idea, but one with enough depth for all those who long to find and fulfill the purpose of their lives.

College and Seminary Elect New Student Council Presidents

by Laurie Chong

Ollege student council president Ruth Poproski intends to use her education to make a difference among youth.

"There is not a lot of help out there for kids in the inner city," said the third-year Bachelor of Religious Education (youth) major. "I hope to work in a church as a youth pastor later on."

Poproski also intends to make a difference through her role as student council president. Her goals for this year's council include having the school involved in more neighborhood outreach.

"It'd be neat to see the school branch out into the community more," said Poproski. "I'd like to work toward bringing students together in this way."

Poproski, who studied electrical engineering at the University of Waterloo for a year and a half, plans to continue work as a youth leader at Immanuel Baptist Church this fall.

f you were to ask seminary student council president Kaarina Hsieh to describe her role at the school in two words, they would be "to serve."

"I have a burden to pray for the students and their families," said the thirdyear Master of Divinity (youth and family) student. "Being student council president is an ideal way to serve the school."

Presently, Hsieh works as a youth pastor at New Covenant Alliance Church and considers this work a blessing.

"I love working with teens," she said. "More and more this summer, I've been challenged in so many ways through what these youth are teaching me." Hsieh has also had increased opportunities to counsel young people about life-changing issues through her pastoral role.

"Youth work is discipling ministry," said Hsieh. "God has placed heavy on my heart the desire to see teens be equipped for their own ministries."

Hsieh, who completed her Bachelor of Arts in philosophy and political science at the University of Western Ontario, plans to work in a pastoral capacity in a church, hospital or correctional centre after graduation.

Where are they now?

by Laurie Chong

Describing Ken Michell as a "dustkicker" has a two-fold meaning.

The most obvious one would be in reference to the Christian musical band of which he is a part. The second meaning requires the knowledge of an ancient language.

"During a Greek class in seminary, we learned that the meaning of 'deacon' was one who kicks dust in his haste to serve," said the Dustkickers vocalist and guitar player. It is the latter meaning that drives him in life.

Michell was born in Tokyo, Japan, to missionary parents. The family (including three sisters) moved to Toronto when Michell was five. After high school, he spent a year at Capernwray Bible School in England, then went on to the University of Toronto to complete a Bachelor of Science in psychology. The Dustkickers were formed in 1991, during his last year of university. He and two other friends were asked to perform at a coffee house for InterVarsity Christian Fellowship. At the time, none considered this as a career. Michell himself had his eye on teacher's college. After graduation, he worked at a community service agency at a group home and it was during this time Michell decided to become a Christian counsellor. He enrolled at the seminary to complete a Master of Divinity (counselling) as his first step. Halfway through this education, however, he realized that pursuing a musical career with the Dustkickers was his future.

"Somebody once told me that the enemy of the best was not the worst but rather, the good," said Michell. "I realized there's only so much you can do with the gifts you have, especially to attain the best level."

The year of 1995 was a turning point in his life. In March, he married Karen Hurlburt, his girlfriend of seven years. That spring, he graduated from the seminary and in June, the Dustkickers played for over 60,000 people at the Billy Graham crusade at the Toronto Skydome.

The Dustkickers have produced four albums: a 12-song cassette, Christmas CD, Blue Sky Blanket and twentythree. Their latest work's title is based on Psalm 23, which talks about God's presence during good and bad times.

"When we put the album together, the theme of God's grace being extended meant that He set a feast, not merely a table, for us," said Michell. "He gives us more than what we expect."

Grace has also been a large part of his family life. Last Christmas Eve, his father David died instantly in a head-on collision with a severely alcohol-impaired driver. The Michell family has drawn on their faith to get through this difficult time.

"This year has been harder to be away because of my dad's death," said Michell. "Even though we may not have seen each other regularly because of his travelling schedule and my own, we still always had contact through the phone."

The self-described "acoustic groove" musicians are Tyndale's new Artists in Residence, which means an increased role in the school's activities such as chapel services and community events. They will be leading worship during chapel on September 17, October 15, November 5 and 26.

KLARA SIBER BRE '98 -

At the North York Crisis Pregnancy Centre, volunteers like Klara Siber make a difference.

Siber, who began work there in January this year as part of a field education placement, continued on because of the opportunity to help women make often difficult decisions about pregnancy.

"It's been a great ministry opportunity to see how pregnancy changes a person's life," said the recent Bachelor of Religious Studies graduate. "We are there from the beginning and we are there to help them with this stage."

to counsel people under pressure?"" Recently, Siber worked with a 14-yearold client who found out she was 12 weeks pregnant. The young woman, although willing to tell the father of the child, was scared to tell her Siber decided to continue on with this work of counselling clients and referring them to medical professionals because she enjoys the interaction with different people. Also, she points out that this is good preparation for her career, because it is headed in the Christian counselling field. Siber will attend Tyndale this fall to study her Master of Divinity (counselling) and brings with her lessons learned at the school.

"I found it a challenge in college to find the time to do devotions and separate studying and doing homework from reading the Bible for my own growth," said Siber. "Also, the field education opportunity I had was good practice for the future because it tested me under pressure and I asked myself, 'Do I want parents. Siber counselled her on the best options for her and the child.

"This girl was to begin grade eight in the fall," said Siber. "I help people make very difficult choices."

A ministry tool the centre has is the giving of Hope Bibles, which are designed especially for expectant women.

"Most are willing to take a Bible when we ask," said Siber. "This is encouraging because we don't want to force them to do anything."

The centre has a clothing closet for mother and child, as well as baby food and supplies. They also give out educational materials to clients, to encourage wise decision-making.

"We're helping women make the best possible choices for themselves and their children, to save as many lives as possible," said Siber. "This is why I'm there."

Preparing for the Great Year 2000 Chaos PART II OF AN ARTICLE ON THE Y2K ISSUE

oday, your computer thinks it is the year 98, not 1998. In 15 months it will think it is the year 00. No one fully knows the potential consequences of such a logistic condition. Something will happen, but there is still no unanimity among experts as to the severity of the problem or the best way for you and I to prepare for the possible fallout.

On January 1st, 2000, we can expect anything from the temporary loss of a few essential services, all the way to a full-scale, world-wide social, technological and economic meltdown. What a variance! Will we need an extra sweater or a bomb shelter? Will we find ourselves without access to our savings, or to the basics of life .... food, water, utilities, even health care?

Larry Willard

Many of you asked after our last article, "Should I prepare for a long period of inconvenience or a few days, or months?" With our utter dependance on technology, we will need God's wisdom and His guidance to help us prepare for that day, and aid us to support both the Christian community and others in need.

By now you have heard news stories painting frightening pictures with warnings that enemy agents posing as technicians have infiltrated our top business and government computer systems, countries threatening to take advantage of the West's military disability on January 1, 2000, to the growing threat of organized crime's plans to take advantage of any chaos. There are even reports that concern by government leaders has led to discussion with NATO to ask Collin Powell to launch a global army to oversee the protection, management and ration of all the planet's resources, (finance, utilities and food). Great ammunition for the launch of the New World Order!

However, no matter how extreme the fallout, I still believe it is unconscionable for us to consider abandoncomputer problem that has so far cost business $300 billion worldwide, will cost another $300-700 billion before it is fixed, and that does not include what Lloyds of London expect to be a $1.5 trillion litigation expense and $2-3 trillion more for government post-2000 fixes. World wide we are looking at trillions of lines of computer code, billions of embedded chips and millions of program hours to fix the problem. No matter how prepared we are here in the West, we are now married to the global economy. An international survey by the reliable Gartner Group found that 70% of world governments are not ready for Y2K. Some, like countries in South America and the Middle East, and others like Russia, and the economically strapped Pacific Rim have resigned themselves to waiting to see what happens before they react because of costs.

Gartner also found that 50% of all businesses worldwide will experience major failure of their mission critical computer systems. The West might have 70% of their computer systems ready, but the global community interembedded chips failed and brought the system down.

Sweden's nuclear power commission has just announced they will bring all their plants down on December 31, 1999 and bring them up slowly one by one after January 1, 2000. Other nations have already completed similiar programs or plan to follow their lead. It took New Zealand for instance, 3 months to complete repairs. So, what does this say to you and I?

Even if some feel we are possibly over reacting, at the very least we can anticipate possible regional shortages of power, food or banking services. We can assess our own home situation and begin now to conserve energy, look into alternate heating sources and look for alternatives to electrical appliances. That's what responsible stewardship of limited resources is all about any way.

In addition, we may decide to keep at least a few weeks supply of cash, food and water around home, just for assurance.

For a temprary water supply, fill your bath tub (add a drop of chlorine) New Years Eve and if you don't need it, drain it the next day. Candles, flashlights and an alternative to electric or gas stoves might be useful. Remember it will be January in Canada... hope> fully we learned much from our Ouebec hydro failure of winter '98.

Pick up extra batteries for your flashlights and radio and don't forget that if there is no electricity in some areas you will need to take care of your sanitation needs. Ideally each of us should take an inventory of everything that we would need to survive a few weeks in mid-winter. On the Internet there are several web sites contact me.

And what of the responsibility and the opportunity for the body of believers? Churches may want to begin holding information sessions with their congregations and neighborhood communities to educate people on the issue. Plan to act as food banks or provide counselling service. People who usually don't ask for prayer will be open. Unfortunately unemployment may be a factor so setting up a help service will be wise. Some U.S. churches are forming small 'buddy' groups within their congregation and greater community to do regular check-ups on each other. If your group is planning something interesting, let us know. If this tragedy occurs it will come as no surprise to God and we can count on Him to provide opportunities for us to shine. Luke 21 says that there will be a time when men's hearts will fail them for fear of what's coming upon the earth. Could Y2K be just such a time? What a fitting and sobering reminder of the fallibility of mankind and the real reason we are celebrating the year 2000 anyway. Let's remind the world of the real chaos God has spared us from in Jesus.

ORGAN DONATION: A Gift of Life

by Rebecca Whitt Warrick

Organ donation is an issue that doesn't confront most of us in our daily lives, but for the majority for whom it does,

it is a matter of

life and death. With modern technology, the kidneys, heart, lungs, and liver are transplantable along with other organs and tissues. There are two dilemmas that arise with organ donation: procurement and distribution. Some organs vital to life can only be procured upon death of the donor while other tissues and organs, such as the kidney, can be donated without significantly endangering the donor's life. According to the Multiple Organ Retrieval and Exchange Program of Ontario (MORE), 628 people received an organ transplant in 1997. However, by the end of 1997, 1029 people were waiting for an organ transplant. With a shortage of organs, this should pose a question for Christians concerned with our social impact: what can I do to allay the problem? While one may not be able to find a clear cut answer in the Bible, Christ's sacrificial death serves as the ultimate example. And did not Christ say in John 15:13, "Greater love has no one than this, that he lay down his life for his friends." Just how do we do this? In Ontario, there is the MORE program through which all adults have an opportunity to sign a donor card and specify which organs they wish to donate after death. It is vital that such decisions are discussed with family members as numerous cases have shown that family wishes often override the requests of loved ones upon their death. While many of us will not be called upon to sacrifice our lives, we have an opportunity to give life in our death

For further information about organ and tissue donation, call M.O.R.E. at 1-800-263-2833.

Rebecca is in her second year of the Master of Divinity program in counselling. She currently serves on the ethics committee at West Park Hospital in Etobicoke and plans to pursue further studies in bioethics upon graduation.

"In the year 2000, when all of the computers stop working, companies will pay you millions of dollars to add numbers for them!"

> dependence for raw materials or the supply of components for our finished goods could cause wide-spread economic upheaval.

> Ed Yardeni, chief economist for Deutsche Bank Securities in New York is now forecasting a 70% chance of a severe global recession or depression triggered by computer failures. A domino effect could run through all suppliers lasting days or months. It would appear to be wise, if unfortument of the less able bodied of society for the sake of ourselves. That simply is not Christ's way.

Many Christians are confused by the conflicting and quite convincing reports that all is well. They have heard the issue is a hoax or at least widely exaggerated. This is just the predictable end of the world millennial fever. You hear that programers will fix the year 2000 computer bugs and will make the deadline easily. Some jokingly suggest the only suffering in 2000 will be by those who have to eat the canned food and dried fruit they stocked up on. Agreed, we should 'not panic' but that does not mean 'not prepare.'

But, the truth is, the Y2K problem is far from psychosomatic. There is nothing imaginary or schizophrenic about a nately not feasible, for all of us to be out of debt before 2000.

The gambit in all this is the over 70 billion computer processors, called embedded chips, that are installed in just about every major electronic device all over the world. Numerous and very difficult to check for compliance, it is estimated that 5-10% are in mission critical devices like power plants, oil refineries, telephone equipment, hospital equipment, and manufacturing equipment. About 25% will fail. A few months ago, a power plant in New Zealand tested their completed Y2K programming, ran their date clock to 2000, and then experienced a major disaster. It cost millions to fix the damage. Millions were impacted. The problem? These hidden and deeply

Ethics in a Confusing World

by James A. Beverley, Professor of Theology and Ethics, Seminary

L is easy to be morally overwhelmed in our messed up and confused world. Sorting right from wrong can seem an impossible task in light of opposing moral positions and the staggering amount of data we have to process in our technological age. Let me suggest three tips for easing the burden of making moral decisions.

1. Distinguish between what is obviously clear and central in God's Word from what is uncertain or secondary. This provides immediate encouragement since the "plain and main things" of Scripture serve as the strong foundation for the path of goodness. Don't worry so much about the things you do not know. Live up to the light you have.

2. Discover your specific gifts and calling. This will allow you to excel in areas of strength. Resist the temptation to solve every problem or right every wrong. Only God can hold the world in His hands. God has made us different and unique so that we can work as a team in doing good.

3. Duplicate the model and message of Jesus in your life. He fed the hungry. He cared for the outcast. He resisted legalism. He loved children. He looked beyond appearances. He praised acts of faith. He washed feet. He prayed to His Father. He fasted. He discouraged divorce. He hated hypocrisy. He engaged in solitude. He was led by the Holy Spirit. He knew the law and the prophets. He used his mind. He was a friend of sinners.

WE'D LIKE TO HEAR FROM YOU... If you have comments or suggestions regarding the items featured in Connection we'd like to hear from you. A selection of letters that we receive by mail or e-mail will be considered for publication in future issues.

新的學年開始, 天神今年新 生比去年增多,為此我們感 谢神!其實天神能夠在大多 市實淺神學普及化實在不簡 單。試想:神驅使鞭策弟兄 姊妹蒙召,經過深思熟慮, 懸切禱告,繼而順服,全然 擺上,當作活祭。然後由牧 者舉薦伸請入學...這一切都 是出於神恩典。感謝神使用 各華人教會及天神的緊密配 答,培育事奉精英,服侍教 會!但感恩之餘,我卻有點 恐懼戰競。因為在這道德倫 亡的社會裡,已經有某些牧 者因偶一不惧,受到名,利 ,財,色,權,誤會,批評 等引誘而跌倒,失去那美好 而實貴的見証,帶來福音去 勢一連串的反效果。加上一 些神學初哥滿以為有些本錢 :論才幹,論口才,論經驗 , 論恩賜, 論學問及學位, 他們都勝人一籌,深信神將 来必定重用他們。其實,神 絕不喜悦這種驕傲心態。故 此,我要向他們發出一個嚴 厲的警告:神是輕慢不得的 !聖經提醒我們每一位事奉 的提摩太首先要"成為聖潔" ,才能"合乎主用"!但願各 主内兄姊每日為天神的教職 員、神學生、靈命生活及經 清所須代禱,防止天神陷入 樹大有枯枝的危機裡! her full-time job while working on a degree.

"I had been thinking about Bible college for a while but I didn't want to give up my job," explained the registered nurse at Parkwood Hospital in London, Ontario. "Then someone suggested Tyndale because they have a new Degree Completion Program (DCP)."

The DCP has students come on campus once a week for four hours, where they learn in cohort groups of 15-25. Over a 20-month period, they take 16 different modules, which lead to a Bachelor of Religious Education degree. Designed for adults at least 25 years old, students in this program must have a year of transferable university or college credit to enroll.

Sheila Dekwaadskniet

"I hope to gain a better knowledge of the Bible," said Dekwaadskniet, who studied nursing at Fanshawe College and recently became certified in neuroscience. "I grew up in a Christian home and attended church all my life but I don't feel that I know enough. I want to use this education to work with youth and improve my communication skills."

Last summer, Dekwaadskniet was the staff nurse at Camp Formosa and credits this experience as the catalyst for her desire to integrate her career with her faith. She plans to continue work with youth after graduation.

"I'm not sure what kind of role I'll have among youth but I do know that I want to serve in this way."

Lives Well Lived

Canada's first black woman minister and a grad of Toronto Bible College ('51), Addie Aylestock, died peacefully in her sleep earlier this summer at the age of 88. During an exceptional career that spanned 31 years, Rev. Aylestock organized and served congregations of the British Methodist Episcopal Church in Montreal and Halifax. Those that knew and loved her well describe her as someone who was always comfortable with herself, never feeling that she had anything to prove, secure in her life-long call and in her service to God.

Dr. Emil Gaverluk, a graduate of Toronto Bible College ('38), died July 3, 1998 at the age of 81. At one point, early in his career, Dr. Gaverluk responded to a call from the Lord to sell all he had, transporting his family on a 15 year ministry up and down the Pacific West Coast of Canada and the US, living and home schooling his children in a modest trailer. A talented musician, artist, radio personality, author and prophecy speaker, Dr. Gaverluk was above all a dedicated pastor, evangelist, family man and friend.

Emma (Sullivan) Austin, (TBC grad '36), took many personal risks during a lifetime of service to God and others. During a stint in Shanghai with the China Inland Mission she contracted tuberculosis and had to recuperate at home in a body cast. After the war she returned to Shanghai, until the communist take-over forced CIM (renamed Overseas Missionary Fellowship) to relocate to Singapore, where she served until 1953. In 1971, Mrs. (Sullivan) Austin married Rev. John Austin (TBC '31) and together, until the time of his death, they energetically served the church and community in countless ways. Mrs. (Sullivan) Austin died July 14th, 1998 at the age of 88.

What about a Will?

A few things in life are constant. One of them is the need for every person to have a properly executed Will. Not only should a Will be in place but it should be updated on a regular basis in order to reflect the most current plans, wishes and financial assets of the one to whom it belongs.

Why have a Will?

First, there is a compelling 'negative' reason for having a Will. If you do not have one, upon your passing, the government will, in effect, make one for you. This means that they will determine in cold, detached, governmental terms, exactly what they demand of your estate. They will determine the amount and disbursement of all assets. You may not be pleased with what they will be doing with your precious possessions so now is the time to act.

Second, there are a number of compelling 'positive' reasons. At the most elementary level, you have worked hard to accumulate the property and other financial assets that make up your estate. They are all blessings from the Lord. You may be surprised to learn just how much you really have. Therefore, it would follow that you would want to have the final say in how it was distributed in order to accomplish all the good that you intend for both family and the Lord's work.

You should desire to see that your relatives and friends are cared for in a manner that would be pleasing to them and to your memory as you leave your mark. They matter. Your love and care in this important area will matter too.

Lastly, in your Will, you have the opportunity to have a most significant impact on the work of the Lord. Many Christians seek to follow the principle of tithing throughout their lives. Why not tithe in your Will?

Your Will at Work!

Your favourite Christian organizations, ministries or training centres such as Tyndale, would be greatly encouraged by your gifts. In addition, you can be satisfied knowing that you have made a lasting impact on the world for Christ.

If you have questions about creating or modifying your Will, we have professionals who are available to help you at no cost or obligation.
